UNIT SOLD & PROFITABILITY

PROMOTION PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS

Key Insights

Profitability Concern

- Gross Profit is negative across the dataset — Cost of Sales consistently exceeds Sales revenue, with margins around -2% in observed periods. This indicates the product is being sold below cost, making every transaction a loss-maker.
- Sales Price Per Unit is remarkably stable at ~R32.40, suggesting uniform pricing with no premium tiers or dynamic pricing strategy.

Promotion Impact

- Promotion 3 (27 Feb – 10 Mar 2014) was the strongest volume driver, peaking at 26,410 units on 1 Mar 2014 — a 4–10× increase over typical non-promotional days (2,000–6,000 units).
- Promotion 1 (30 Dec 2013 – 1 Jan 2014) showed elevated but lower volumes (2,678–9,268 units), partly due to the shorter 3-day window.
- Critical finding: While promotions drive volume, the negative gross profit margin means higher promotional volumes may be amplifying losses rather than improving profitability.

Volume Patterns

- Weekends (Friday & Saturday) consistently show higher unit sales, with normal-day peaks often reaching 9,000–10,000+ units vs weekday averages of 2,000–5,000.
- Daily volumes are highly volatile, swinging from ~1,476 to 26,410 units — a 17× range — indicating strong sensitivity to promotional activity and day-of-week effects.

Recommendations

- Re-evaluate pricing strategy — selling below cost is unsustainable; even a small price increase could flip the gross profit positive.
- Assess promotion ROI — promotions boost volume but may worsen profitability at current margins. Consider cost-reduction or price-adjustment before running further promotions.
- Leverage weekend demand — targeted weekend promotions or premium pricing on high-demand days could improve margins without sacrificing volume.
